The notion of Germany (and Japan) as "civilian powers" originated from the observation that both West Germany and Japan - who by the late 1980s were again among the leading economic and military powers - pursued foreign policies that diverged significantly from the traditional patterns of great power politics: both countries essentially had transferred responsibility for their national security to the United States (Mauil 1990/91; Mauil 2014).

Germany's Leadership in Europe: Finding Its New Role ...

Recalling the massive anti-NATO protests of the early 1980s in Germany, it does not take much imagination to see the current Merkel government terrified of such a scenario becoming reality. Germany's already ambiguous stance towards nuclear weapons adds to the problem. Germany has signed and ratified the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT).
