In Sensational Subjects: The Dramatization of Experience in the Modern World (Bloomsbury, January 2015), John Jervis considers the way murder became a staple of the popular press in the early nineteenth century, with gruesome descriptions deployed to make a direct impact on the sensations of the reader. This fascination grew so that by the end of the 20th Century the mass media sensationalism had become the norm, with depictions of sensation taken up by literature, art and film.
